Colon Cleansing Is Your Colon Killing You ?

A toxic colon is a major factor in the development of food intolerance leading to chronic ill health. You cannot expect to be well if the main organ responsible for ridding the body of toxic waste is under-functioning. When the colon is irritated by diet, stress, drugs, chemicals, and other substances, it tries to protect itself by producing more mucus. This additional mucus can bind with the sludge from refined foods, such as white flour, and build up on the wall of the bowel, narrowing the lumen. This layer of gluey, hardened feces - mucoid plaque will built up in the colon and can weigh several pounds. Mucoid plaque is a good place for harmful organisms to breed.

How This Toxic Layer Can Affect the Body?

The local effects of this mucoid plaque are irritation and inflammation of the colon: the general reactions include diarrhea, constipation, fatigue, headaches, dull eyes, poor skin, spots, aching muscles, joint pains, and depression. The poisons circulate via the blood through the lymphatic system to all parts of the body. When the muscles of the colon wall lose tone, then ballooning, or the formation of pouches called diverticula result, leading to a condition known as diverticulosis. The food trapped in these pockets creates a breeding ground for bacteria. The result can be diverticulitis, an infection where there is often a fever and acute abdominal pain. This condition needs medical help.

How Long Does It Take to Clean the Colon?

Colon cleansing is the first step on the road to recovery. It is unlikely that you will have a cleansed colon within a couple of weeks: it could take months. When you have cleansed your colon and restored the balance of the good and bad bacteria, when you have adequate production of enzymes and your dietary intake and internal production of vitamins is correct, your food intolerance should greatly improve or disappear.
